

Now you're talking, Kiwi style

SYDNEY — New Zealand computer telephony integration company, Talking Computers, is to launch a new company called Talking Computers Australia.

"After over 15 years in New Zealand and more than six years of supporting customers in Australia, the time is right to establish a permanent presence in Australia to support our local customers," said Keith Chapman, managing director of the new company.

Talking Computers has partnered with wholesale VoIP provider ISPhone Australasia for the launch. "Including (Talking Computers') SuperSuite in our offer reflects our ongoing strategy to deliver a dedicated proposition for the SME", said ISPhone's MD, Gavin McDougal.